Introduction to Theory and Research in Heritage Languages: A Critical Overview

This lecture is designed to provide graduate students and other early career researchers in fields such as second language acquisition, theoretical linguistics, applied linguistics, sociology and anthropology of language, and psycholinguistics with a foundation in theories surrounding the acquisition of heritage languages. The goals of this presentation are twofold: to present the three theories that have been influential to heritage language acquisition research, and to highlight how these theories pave the way forward for research on this topic. This presentation is oriented towards students in the Department of Spanish and Portuguese, but is relevant for attendees in any of the fields addressed above.
